

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An information storage medium includes a substrate forming a first groove having a depth, and a second groove adjacent to the first groove and different depth from the first groove; and a recording layer formed on the substrate to record information marks, making optical characteristics of the information marks different for each such that diffracted lights from the plurality of marks orthogonally intersect one another.